Description:

Sunset Hospital is a former hospital and aged care facility located in Dalkeith, Western Australia. Built in 1906 under the name Claremont Old Men's Home, it once housed up to 750 men. The design of the house was based on a military model, made from large stone blocks quarried from local limestone with accommodation for 400 men. It included an infirmary and a hospital. The design comprised three main blocks. Each of these in turn had L shaped dormitories with ablutions placed centrally in an inner quadrangle with 2 padded cells in B block. There was also a spacious dining room and laundry which had a further half acre of washing line.

General Notes:

The collection of buildings over 7.9 hectares makes up one of the largest intact early twentieth century public health facilities in the State.
